Long Ranger Takes HiLux The Extra Distance

Australia's leading long range fuel and water tank specialists, Long Ranger has released a new fuel tank for the 2005 Toyota HiLux. The new tank doubles the Toyota's range, replacing the 76-litre standard tank without the need for under-vehicle modification. Suitable for petrol and diesel models, the Long Ranger tank utilises all of the original fittings for ease of conversion.

The CAD assisted design means that the Long Ranger tank does not compromise off-road ability or effect ride height in 4WD HiLux models, fitting neatly into the vehicle's existing tank area and retaining the original emission system. Manufactured using two-millimetre Aluminised steel for its superior corrosion resistance, the tank offers outstanding strength and durability and boasts all of the features that have made Long Ranger the most respected name in the design and manufacture of aftermarket fuel and water tanks. With full internal baffling, inbuilt fuel retention chamber, drain plug and a comprehensive fitting kit and instructions, the Long Ranger tank unlocks the Toyota's touring potential, giving the HiLux tremendous versatility across the model range.

Long Ranger Tanks' chief of design, Ric Black is extremely happy with the end result of the exhaustive research and design project for this new tank:

"Each new vehicle presents its own unique challenges when it comes to designing new components that will add to the vehicle's performance with the minimum of fuss" Mr Black said. "HiLux has always been a hugely popular vehicle in Australia and with 30 model variants, the new HiLux will no doubt continue that trend. The demand for quality long range and supplementary tanks has always been significant for HiLux and it's been a tremendous effort to get the new tank ready in time for the vehicle's Australian release."

With more than 30 years in the industry, Long Ranger products have earned a reputation for quality and reliability, boasting a three-year national warranty with Australia-wide backup and support through ARB, Australia's leading 4WD supplier.
